Summary

French trilingual translator, interpreter, and intercultural communication specialist with academic and professional experience in Japan.Born and raised in France, I spent six years in Japan, where I earned both my Bachelor's and Master's degrees from Rikkyo University in Tokyo, specializing in Intercultural Communication, Translation, and Interpretation. During my studies, I worked on professional translation and interpretation projects through Rikkyo Community Language Service (RiCoLaS) as both a translator/interpreter and Project Manager, while also gaining experience in multilingual interpretation services in French, English, and Japanese for clients in industries such as insurance, banking, and aviation during my university years.Today, I work as a freelance translator, interpreter, and intercultural communication specialist, supporting clients operating between Japan, France, and international markets. My areas of interest include business communication, tourism, international exchange, education, sports, cultural promotion, and France–Japan relations.My international perspective has also been shaped by academic experiences abroad, including studies in Manchester focused on international politics, business, and marketing.#♀#Beyond languages, sports have played a central role in my personal and professional development. As former captain of my university's Olympic weightlifting club, I developed leadership, discipline, and teamwork skills that continue to guide my approach to every project.My passion for both sports and languages led me to dedicate my Master's thesis to sports interpreting, and I am currently pursuing certifications in strength training and Olympic weightlifting coaching.
